Here are some reputable consumer health information sites similar to MedlinePlus:

Mayo Clinic (mayoclinic.org): Detailed articles on diseases, symptoms, tests, and treatments, plus drug and supplement information, all reviewed by Mayo Clinic medical experts.

Cleveland Clinic Health Library (my.clevelandclinic.org/health): Clear, patient-friendly explanations of conditions, procedures, and wellness topics.

CDC (cdc.gov): Authoritative U.S. government information on diseases, vaccines, travel health, injury prevention, and public health alerts.

NHS Health A-Z (nhs.uk/conditions): The UK National Health Service's guide to conditions and treatments, written in plain language and good for a non-U.S. perspective.

Johns Hopkins Medicine Health Library (hopkinsmedicine.org/health): Searchable library covering conditions, treatments, and healthy living, written for general audiences.

Drugs.com (drugs.com): Useful for drug information, interaction checkers, and symptom overviews. Note that both are ad-supported, so they're worth using alongside the more institutional sources above.

WebMD (webmd.com) WebMD is a popular online resource for looking up general health information, including symptoms, conditions, medications, and treatment options in plain language. It's best used for learning and preparing questions for a doctor, not for diagnosing yourself or replacing professional medical advice.
